Ask the Watercolor Doctor:

Dear Watercolor Doctor: Here is my latest column for the Watercolor Doctor.

Question: Have you ever accepted a commission? Do you think it's a good idea? What are the pros and cons?

Answer: On a few occasions I have agreed to paint a painting on commission for an art agent or for someone I knew. The positive aspects of this are that it is really good for one's morale, and it gets you going with renewed energy. But after that rush of great feelings subsides, you are left to do the work of trying to paint something both you and your client will consider beautiful and will be proud of.

When a client or friend sees a group of your completed works, he or she may relate to aspects of them in ways you cannot guess or fully appreciate, since each one of us has a personal aesthetic sense. Sometimes a viewer will praise some unexpected portion or color of a work which you don't think is very special. Sometimes the paintings you think are most striking and accomplished will be totally overlooked by a viewer.

That is why, when you are doing a commissioned piece, you can only guess at what will please the client, based on your own feelings. This can make you unsure and afraid to add something or some color to the work which you think enhances it, but could displease the person who will ultimately be buying it. Watercolor, with all of its quirks, can also produce "happy accidents" which you may be able to capitalize on in the finished piece, but which can't be reproduced if necessary, or which may displease the client in a commissioned work.

My personal opinion is that if people want to buy a painting of yours, it is much better to show them a body of work and let them choose. You may be surprised by the outcome!

Your Watercolor Doctor,

Carol Z. Brody, carolzbrody@comcast.net

Please let us know if you have any questions for our watercolor doctor. Carol is happy to answer any questions you may have Carol Z. Brody was awarded an Honorable Mention from the Rocky Mountain National Watermedia Exhibition in Evergreen, CO, for her painting, "Party Papers, Ribbons and Red Confetti." Carol is also the juror for the exhibition of the Women in the Visual Arts in Palm Beach County, FL, in November.

Subject Matter: The Elements of Success

The Elements of Success is a workshop that looks at key elements that most painters are very weak in executing, Hue/Value/Temperature.

The concentration is on how to make colors more saturated and strong, pushing values for a more dramatic impact and understanding how to control the temperature of a painting and the overall affect it can have on how the painting is interpreted.

These three elements are the weakest points in most artists paintings and I will show how they can take a painting from OK to GREAT!
